See life from a new angle

A brief history of the Czechoslovak National House
Settled at LONDON since 1946
74 West End Lane
NW62LX

In 1939, the Duke of Bedford Place first initiated a club in Holborn, for the Czechoslovakian legionaries who fought for the British army. This club remained here until 1946, but due to the slight inconvenience regarding a ban for serving beer in Holborn, the legionaries bought a new property in 1946, with money that they saved and with the aid of £3,000 from President Beneš (the second president of Czechoslovakia)

Club that after many years still exists for the Czech and Slovak community living and visiting London, and certainly anyone else wishing to experience a small bit of the Czech and Slovakian heritage right here in London.

In 1946, the club saw and suffered the absence of many legionaries who were leaving Great Britain to return to their homeland, after the end of WWII.

In 1948 people immigrated to Great Britain from communist Czechoslovakia, some being these same legionaries and many more were new emigrants who fled from communism.

1950's and 1960's brought financial prosperity to the club and saw it provide an element of home for those unable or not wanting to return 1970's experienced even more emigration from Czechoslovakia, and hence more business and popularity The Czechoslovak National House remains nearly unchanged today to the original style and decor. A unique and satisfying experience for any visitor wanting to enjoy European cuisine, with the ideal complement of Czech beer.
